Since Hindi was the language of the Indian subcontinent until the early 19th century, English speaking people from India and Africa have used the language of choice in many countries. From South Africa the English spoke in Hindi, was called a "Pattam" and was often used in advertisements. In many cases, Hindi is an early sign language. In many parts of Africa languages are spoken more than 200 years prior to Hindi as are Arabic, Malay and Swahili. The origins of these languages cannot be explained as simply and can only be attributed to evolution. The word "Hindi" was created in the early 1880s by Sir William L'Atelier who was working in India. The word Hindi derives from the Sanskrit word, Hindi. It does not have the same phonetic characteristics of English; it is a compound word that has four vowels. It derives from the Hindu "Hindra" or "Hinduism", which translates as "The religion of the Hindus".. Hindi and Arabic in North America & Europe in World History The word "Hindi" has been identified as either a word to mean "the Hindu religion", or it would mean "Hindus in North America and Europe who migrated from the east". Both ideas have been proposed and supported by the British historian G W J Bair in his book, The Middle East: A History of the Cultures of the Near East and the Near East (1975). While a few hundred years ago, there were no modern Indian and Indian-American communities in the Near East, there were still numerous people who settled in the area around present day Baghdad and Aleppo and from there they spread to other Middle East cities including Beirut and Beirut. This was a "second wave" of immigrants who came from all over the western world, coming from Europe, India and Australia - the "white continent". In the late Victorian "White Migration", European and Asian Indians settled on the southern coast of California and northern San Francisco. From there migration to New York City was made, along with immigration of Indians from all over Europe. This was followed by a later wave. This also included the arrival by sea of Africans who settled along the Eastern seaboard of America, including New Orleans, Charleston and St. Louis.

As part of that effort, the Trudeau government will spend roughly $15 billion over the next few years over the next decade to train foreign workers, increase supply chains in Canada, and spend $50 million a year on programs that support Canadians struggling financially.. The government's new fiscal target of $2.9 billion in new federal spending during the 2015–16 fiscal year also includes funding for a new, six-year funding program for "Canadian Workforce Development for Small and Emerging Canada." It will see the federal government invest $1 billion annually from fiscal 2014–15 to support the work of small-business owners. They will receive some support from other revenue programs, but, as part of this program, will be required to report certain information to government to provide the latest information to the federal government by the end of the five-year
